From Our Pastor

Breaking Up the Fallow Ground

"Break up your fallow ground, for it is time to seek the Lord until He comes to rain righteousness on you..." (Hosea 10:12)

On a recent drive up Independence Boulevard, heading to uptown Charlotte, the demolition of abandoned structures is in overdrive. Once a stretch of Independence engulfed in hectic commerce activity, long now open-air plazas and strip malls filled with emptiness and parking lots jammed with open spaces. Yet, these abandoned buildings are being pummeled, crushed to dust, making way for lively commerce to return yet again.

The traffic and stop lights provided time for me to share stories with Candace about Reliable Music (the music store with the best variety of acoustic guitars I've ever known), the old Charlotte Coliseum (where I saw David Robinson drop 50 points on Michigan in his last game as a college student), Owens Auditorium, and on and on.

Far away from the urban sprawl that is Charlotte, Israel, in Hosea's day, was a nation of agrarian folk. Images of the sod, crops, and work of the land are common and helpful for integrating the secular and the spiritual. Hosea addresses them as a nation with stagnant faith (my evangelical friends refer to such folks as backsliders). Hosea employs this image of fallow ground so farmers and shepherds can relate. He rebukes them for their idolatry and sharply warns them of the impending judgments of God.

Fallow ground, once tilled, has gotten hard and now lies as a wasteland. It needs to be broken up and made soft again, before it is ready for growth.

Breaking up the fallow ground is Hosea's way of calling his people to churn under all their evil habits; clear their hearts of weeds, in order that they may be prepared for the seed of righteousness and faith. Land was allowed to lie fallow that it might become more fruitful; but when in this condition, it soon became overgrown with thorns and weeds. The cultivator of the soil was careful to break up his fallow ground before sowing seed in it. So says the prophet, "Break off your evil ways, repent of your sins, cease to do evil, and then the good seed of the word will have room to grow and bear fruit."

As 2014 begins, may we break up the fallow ground at LPC. Churn under all the old, thorny, overgrown places in our congregation that need to be refreshed and renewed. The session initiated this process with a strategic retreat to begin the new year. How can we as a church turn under the stale and dried up ground for new pliable ground for spiritual growth?

As 2014 begins, maybe we need to break up the fallow ground of our own hearts. We must begin by looking within to examine carefully the state of our hearts and minds to see where we are. While many people never even seem to think about doing this, may we exam our lives and break up the fallow ground. Self-examination consists of looking at your life, considering your motives and actions.

May we allow the Spirit to plow through the fallow areas of our lives. Let us begin anew in the Spirit. The results will be a fruitful harvest of godly living for us that that will be a witness to others of God's presence in our lives and in the life of our congregation.

Sunday Worship Service is broadcast on WLNC 1300 Sunday at 11 am, & on the internet (wlncradio.com) On TV Channel 2 Sundays at 10 am and Tuesdays at 8 pm for the previous week's service.

The Membership Committee is also showing Sunday's service at Scotia in the MMEC at 2 pm for the same day's service. The church office is providing large print bulletins and hymns.

Placing Flowers in the Sanctuary

The Flower Calendar, maintained by Lynn Mason, is posted in the office. If you would like to put flowers in the church on Sunday, please contact Lynn Mason 280-1417 to see what dates might be available.

The Worship Committee is pleased to offer the use of two colored silk flower arrangements (or white for communion Sundays) to be place in the sanctuary on Sunday mornings. Because the Pastor's Discretionary Fund is used often to discreetly help those in our congregation and community who are in need, we are hopeful that some who wish to honor loved ones might choose to make a donation to the Pastor's Discretionary Fund instead of purchasing flowers. The silk flowers would be used for that Sunday and the bulletin would read, "In lieu of flowers this Sunday, _____ has made a donation to the Pastor's Discretionary Fund in memory (or in honor) of _____."

Jim Wallis of Sojourners offers a few ideas that the Church should consider for 2014.

Some of the ideas that he presented are:

Honestly answer the question “Why in the world would anyone want to come to this church?”— I believe that this is the biggest question that every church must ask itself. How one answers this question affects the ministry, outlook, and mission of the church. If you answer this question honestly, the answer might surprise you and scare you all at the same time.

Try Something New—One of the complaints is that the church is stuck in the 1950s. Let’s expand our horizons and try something new. In every church I have ever worked or preached in, I have heard “we like things the way they are.” I’m not calling for the church to re-orient the sanctuary but try something, anything. There are great new modern hymns, new Bible translations and worship styles just waiting to be used. Give them a try, you might actually like them. If God can make all things new, then why not take God up on the offer; you’ll never know what’s out there until you try.

Pass The Torch—The younger generations in many churches are waiting to be able to take over the reigns and serve God, but some people are unwilling to let go. The year 2014 is the time. Let’s inject some new life in stale committees/ministry teams/church leadership. Hearing how a different generation or segment of the population understands and seeks out the Divine is a wonderful learning experience. “Do not let your own preferences and comfort segregate an entire generation from service to the church.” The church cannot tell the next generation to “wait your turn” any longer.

Fail (a Lot if You Have to)—The fear of failure is one of the biggest impediments to ministry. No one wants to devote time, effort, energy, and even money to a project that is going to fail. I completely understand. However, through the act of failure we are able to examine what went well and what didn’t. Failure is a necessity for innovation. Edison failed hundreds of times before he perfected the light bulb. The church is not immune to failure so we should stop acting like it.

Join the 21st Century—In 2000 having a website was a luxury; now it’s a necessity. More and more people share, learn, collaborate, and access news from pop culture to current world events thanks to the power of the Internet. The church, however, has been lagging behind in this category. Too often this is delegated to a committee or a person who will update it if/when there is time. One of the biggest turnoffs for many people is a website that hasn’t been updated in six months. There are many different resources to record sermons, worship services, etc. Many of them are free or fairly cost effective. If a website is too daunting of a task or too expensive, then maybe look into Facebook and Twitter; they are pretty user friendly and also free.

Review Mission Statement—Many churches have mission statements; they are the words that guide the ministries of that congregation. There is one small problem: Hardly anyone in the congregation (the pastor included) can recite it. A mission statement should be simple enough to remember but still encapsulate the church, which can be challenging. If your church hasn’t even looked at the mission statement in the past decade, it’s time to. Every ministry project of a congregation should reflect this statement; it doesn’t have to be verbose, it doesn’t have to be complex but, it does have to be real.

Read More (books, blogs, Bible)—Some followers of Christ do not have a regular reading routine. Many people know the stories and know the characters in the Bible, but that is it. Some are busy with their jobs, lives, kids, etc. and cannot find the time to fit one more thing in. There is a treasure trove of theological thought from Christian bloggers/authors/theologians from various walks of life. They bring a new perspective on the world and Christianity. They help to form conversations and articulate thoughts in differing ways thus opening the conversation up more. Taking time to read the Bible, blogs, and books (religious and nonreligious), we can see how the story of God can be told over and over again in many different ways.

Study More—Why are we going to the Bible to only reinforce what we already know? Let’s take some time in 2014 to look at the Bible with fresh eyes, listen for the voice of God with open ears, and have open, honest, faithful conversations. Billions of people have read the Bible over thousands of years and yet each time we approach the text we find something that we had never noticed before. Try different ways of reading the Bible like lectio divina or examen prayers. Try a new translation or commentary. Be open to what God is speaking to you and your church, it might surprise you (in a good way).

Love More—Sadly the church has received an unfortunate reputation of being cold and unloving. Now hear me out, I'm not saying that all churches are this way but every church can be more loving. Love in my opinion is at the heart of the gospel but if our love is bound by conditions then we are squandering a free gift, the free gift of God's love given to all. (See I John 4:19.) I'm not talking about "love the sinner, hate the sin" mentality either; love is extended to all people from God. Christ's teaching to love our neighbor as ourselves cannot be limited. Love and care for all of humanity is the basis of the ministry of Jesus; let's open our hearts and our doors and love all people no matter what.

Stop targeting "young people" (especially if you are not going to do what it takes to keep them)— First off, young people aren't lazier than the previous generation and it's not the iPhone's, MTV's, or the Devil's fault that they aren't attending church. We know the stats and we see it happening in churches across the country — young people are leaving the church and they are leaving it in droves. Try as they might some churches are not willing to allow new, fresh, differing ideas, thoughts, theologies, and beliefs in their church building. There is this unwritten understanding that "we want people to come and experience the Jesus we know even if it doesn't speak to them." This is another door slammed in the face of the next generation. The younger generations do not want to join committees or organizations; they want to join causes. This is a huge shift from previous generations but it's one that the church must recognize. As a minister friend once told me, "the church has lost its particularity in society." He's right; why go to church if it means serving on a committee when you can make just as much of difference with CASA or United Way or Habitat for Humanity? Churches that have a cause to unite others with ministries they are passionate about will generally have the younger generation more invested.

Promote Justice— Justice comes in many different shapes and sizes and is part of the gospel of Jesus Christ. There are simple steps that churches can do to promote justice in the world. One way that I like to promote justice is ensuring that the coffee I drink is from organizations that are Fair Trade Certified. These groups work with co-ops and farmers to make sure that the workers that pick the beans for your morning cup of Joe get paid a fair wage; it's a win-win. You get great coffee (or tea or chocolate) and the workers can provide for their families. There are dozens of organizations focusing on the promotion of justice in the world like International Justice Mission and World Vision International to name a few. God is calling the church in 2014 to look outside of its walls and extend the healing ministry of Christ to all people, in all places, and at all times.
